Effective Solutions to Ethical Dilemmas in AAC

FACULTY

Kathryn Clapsaddle, MS, CCC-SLP, is a speech-language pathologist and clinical program director for THERAPY 2000, a pediatric home health therapy company in Texas. In this role, she helps more than 200 SLPs, OTs, and PTs stay on top of evidence-based practices and meet the ever-changing demands of health care payers. She has previously served as an instructor at Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center in the Department of Communication Disorders and as an education specialist for Speech-Language Pathology at Education Service Center Region 13, in which she provided professional development and technical assistance for SLPs working in more than 60 Texas public school districts.

Over the past 10 years, she has provided professional education for SLPs across the country on a variety of topics, including best practices in service delivery, interventions for children with significant communication impairments, and augmentative and alternative communication. She has served on the editorial board for the journal EBP Briefs and as Vice President for Research and Development for the Executive Board of the Texas Speech-Language-Hearing Association. She considers herself to be a “therapy geek” with a passion for translating clinical evidence for the real world.
