

FACULTY

Dan Hudock, PhD, CCC-SLP, is an Associate Professor of Communication Sciences and Disorders at Idaho State University. A person who stutters himself, he is also the Founding Director of the Northwest Center for Fluency Disorders, which offers a 2-week interprofessional intensive stuttering clinic (NWCDF-IISC) with speech-language pathologists collaboratively working with counselors and psychologists to treat adolescent and adult clients who stutter through acceptance and commitment therapy (ACT) informed frameworks. Hudock's areas of research include psychological, emotional, and social factors of fluency disorders, interprofessional collaborations with mental health professionals, and the neuroscience of speech perception and production in people who stutter using high-density EEG. Hudock has received various funding to support his research, clinical endeavors, and educational outreaches. He has more than 30 peer-reviewed publications and 80 international and local presentations, several recent ones being invited keynote and full-day talks, and one TEDx Talk entitled "Please don't finish my sentence" about the experience of living with a communication disorder.

Financial Disclosures

- Faculty member at Idaho State University
- Founding director of the Northwest Center for Fluency Disorders
- Funding from Malcolm Fraser Grant
- Financial support through the Brenda Bertsch-Malepei Memorial Fund through the ISU Foundation
- Financial compensation from ASHA for this presentation

Nonfinancial Disclosures

- The speaker stutters, knows many people who stutter, and is very involved within fluency disorder communities; some support organizations or resources may be mentioned during the presentation, but they won't be emphasized

Chad Yates, PhD, joined the ISU Department of Counseling in the fall of 2013. He received his PhD in Counselor Education and Supervision from Kent State University and his MA in Community Counseling from the University of Toledo. Before coming to ISU, Yates worked as a mental health and substance abuse counselor in Kent, Ohio. He also was a part-time instructor at Kent State University, Indiana University of Pennsylvania, and Youngstown State University. His counseling experience includes working with individuals with substance abuse disorders, batterers, survivors of domestic violence, families, and as a generalist treating many diverse client issues. He enjoys working in community agencies that serve marginalized and impoverished populations and has a strong pull to service for his community and a passion for helping its members that are in greatest need.

Financial Disclosures

- Financial compensation from ASHA for this presentation

Nonfinancial Disclosures

- None

