DISCLOSURES

The Effectiveness of Hybrid Telepractice and In-Person Fluency Treatment for a School-Aged Child: A Case Study
Jacqueline E. Ryer
Department of Communication Sciences and Disorders, Elmhurst College
Elmhurst, IL

Gerard H. Poll
Department of Speech Pathology and Audiology, Miami University
Oxford, OH

Disclosures
The authors have no relevant financial or nonfinancial interests to disclose.

A User’s Guide for Understanding and Addressing Telepractice Technology Challenges via ZOOM
Megann McGill
Department of Speech and Hearing Sciences, Portland State University
Portland, OR

Kimberly Fiddler
Department of Speech and Hearing Sciences, Portland State University
Portland, OR

Disclosures
Financial: Funding for this research was provided to the first author by the Oregon Scottish Rite of Freemasonry Speech and Language Foundation. The authors have no relevant financial interests to disclose.
Nonfinancial: Megann McGill is an Assistant Professor at Portland State University. Kimberly Fiddler was a graduate student at Portland State University and research assistant in the Portland State University Stuttering Laboratory during the time this project was conducted.

Clinical Study of the Effectiveness of Constant Therapy in the Treatment of Clients With Dementia: Implications for Telepractice
Debra Edgar
College of Health Professions and Sciences, University of Central Florida
Orlando, FL

Peggy L. Bargmann
College of Health Professions and Sciences, University of Central Florida
Orlando, FL

Disclosures
The authors have no relevant financial or nonfinancial interests to disclose.